

Dr. Elliot Tepper

Dr. Elliot Tepper was recruited directly from his PhD program at Duke University by Carleton University, where he has spent his career in the Department of Political Science and Norman Paterson School of International Affairs. Presently he is Distinguished Senior Fellow and Senior Research Fellow in its Centre for Security, Intelligence and Defence Studies, NPSIA, Carleton University; Research Professor in the Department of Political Science; and Adjunct Professor in the Doctor of Social Science Program, Royal Roads University.

He provides policy advice and analysis to the government and international organizations, The Department of National Defence, Foreign Affairs, CIDA, the UNDP, and USAID. Further, he chaired the Academic Advisory Committee for Immigration Canada; he is called upon to provide testimony before Parliament. Dr. Tepper works closely with the international diplomatic corps, located in Ottawa, and is frequently requested to provide analysis in the media at home and abroad. He has published widely in several fields, especially Asian Studies and diversity studies in Canada.

He is recipient of numerous awards including from the Ford Foundation, the Korea Foundation, and a citation from the Government of Bangladesh.