

Steve Day

Founder and President of Reticle Ventures Canada Incorporated (Reticle)

Steve is the founder and president of Reticle Ventures Canada Incorporated (Reticle), a premium security services consultancy, training provider and prime contractor. He is passionate about National Security and Public Safety issues and remains committed to supporting the men and women who protect our way of life.

At the core of Steve's vision for Reticle is a world-class Training and Innovation Centre, Zero4-NORTH, located 1 hour south of Ottawa. The facility is a multi-million dollar investment and is unique within the Canadian market due to its turn-key approach for tactical training and global security operations support.

As a Canadian Special Operations Forces Assault Officer and Army Military Engineer Steve was fortunate to have had a very diversified career with a variety of operational deployments adding depth to the breadth of his experience. He is one of a select group of combat leaders that have multiple deployments conducting global operations that span the entire spectrum of conflict.

He has extensive tactical experience having conducted multiple operations within the following mission sets: Humanitarian Relief and Disaster Recovery, UN Chapter 7, Non-Combatant Evacuation, Counter-Insurgency, as well as domestic and international Counter-Terrorism operations. His experience as a commander and senior staff officer in both national and international headquarters has provided unique insights into the interagency domain.

Steve completed selection for Joint Task Force Two (JTF2) in 2001, was an Assault and Specialist Squadron Commander for 5 years, a senior special operations & CT staff officer for 3 years and was the Commanding Officer and DHTC Base Commander from 2009-2011. He was the National CT Task Force Commander for the Vancouver 2010 Olympic Games, the 2010 G8/G20 Summits, as well as other National Security operational deployments.

He holds a Bachelor of Engineering Degree, a Master of Defence Studies and a Master of Strategic Studies. He lives with his wife and daughter in Kingston, Ontario.
