

SHARON BURKE
Founder and President
Ecospherics

Honorable Sharon E. Burke is the Founder and President of Ecospherics, a policy and advisory firm focused on the intersection of ecospheric health and security. Throughout her career, she has worked to balance national security and environmental sustainability, with a focus on ideas that scale through public policy. Burke has been a leader at several civic organizations, including the Center for a New American Security, where she initiated a Natural Security program. She has also served in the U.S. government, starting her career in the Energy and Materials Program of the U.S. Office of Technology Assessment and as a U.S. Senate staffer. She has worked for three U.S. presidents of both political parties at the State Department and the Pentagon, most recently as the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Operational Energy. During the Biden-Harris presidential transition, she was on the Defense Agency Review and National Security and Foreign Policy teams. A native of Los Angeles and educated at Williams College and Columbia University, Burke is a frequent public speaker, published writer, and strategic advisor to corporate boards, philanthropies, national laboratories, and government agencies.
