DR. HEATHER GRABBE

Senior Fellow

Bruegel

Dr Heather Grabbe is Senior Fellow at Bruegel, the Brussels-based research institute, following public service in the EU institutions and leading of research teams in think-tanks and philanthropy. Her current research covers the intersection of climate change and geopolitics, investigating climate impacts on economic and physical security. She is currently working on how to build resilience to reduce losses and manage risks, but also adaptation to increase strategic autonomy and the evolution of green global value chains. In addition to her role at Bruegel, Heather Grabbe is a Visiting Professor at University College London and Leuven University. She previously served as Director of the Open Society European Policy Institute, Deputy Director of the Centre for European Reform and Senior Adviser to European Commissioner Olli Rehn. She has also conducted research at the European University Institute, Chatham House and the University of Oxford, gaining a PhD from the University of Birmingham.
