ZHANNA PATSORA

Director

Center for Strategic Communications and Regional Studies Development

Zhanna Patsora is a Ukrainian researcher and expert in security studies and strategic communications and Director of the NGO “Center for Strategic Communications and Regional Studies Development”. Her work focuses on climate security in wartime, national and defence resilience, hybrid and cognitive threats, and the role of strategic communications in responding to complex security risks.

In her research and practical work, she pays particular attention to Ukraine's experience, where the impacts of climate change and environmental risks intersect with military threats, the destruction of critical infrastructure, energy-related risks, information operations, and the need to strengthen the resilience of the state, local communities, and the security and defence sector.

Under her leadership, the Center implements research and practice-oriented projects in the fields of information resilience, strategic and crisis communications, and countering disinformation and manipulative influence.

In 2026, Zhanna Patsora defended her dissertation, “International Communications in the New Paradigm of Ukraine's National Security”, at Taras Shevchenko National University of Kyiv. Her research interests include the transformation of the contemporary security environment,
