DR. BENJAMIN SACKS

Professor of Arctic Research

United States Coast Guard Academy's Center for Arctic Study and Policy

Dr. Benjamin Sacks FRGS is Professor of Arctic Research at the United States Coast Guard Academy's Center for Arctic Study and Policy. His current policy research focuses on Arctic and Antarctic political and strategic geographies, governance, all-spectrum communications, and global polar historical-contemporary relationships. Recent work has examined: critical communications infrastructure networks; sovereignty; improving U.S. Coast Guard international affairs efforts; non-Arctic states' evolving polar activities; United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS); NATO polar capabilities and opportunities; and historical claimancy. He is also a Professor of Political Geography at the RAND School of Public Policy and was previously a RAND Corporation national security policy researcher. Sacks completed his Ph.D. and M.A. in History (Political Geography) at Princeton University, his B.A. in History (Global) at Tufts University, and his postdoctoral fellowship in History (Network Science) at Harvard University. He is a permanent elected Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and a 2009 Beinecke Scholar.
