DR. DAVID BORYS

Canadian Military Historian

David Borys is a Canadian military historian from Vancouver who has over a decade of experience teaching university and college courses on Canadian military history. His own research focuses on Canada and the world wars with particular focus on the relationship between the military and civilian populations. His published works include a wide variety of articles covering Canadian military history and have been printed in academic journals such as Canadian Military History Journal and in print media such as the Globe and Mail and the Toronto Star. His first book is titled Civilians at the Sharp End: First Canadian Army Civil Affairs in Europe, 1944-1945. His second and most recent book is titled Punching Above Our Weight: The Canadian Military at War Since 1867 and was published by Dundurn in 2024. This book made the coveted list for top 100 non-fiction books of 2024 put out by The Hill Times. He makes regular appearances on television history programs such as APTN's Nations at War and National Geographic's Hitler's Last Stand. David is also the producer, writer and host of the popular Canadian history podcast, Curious Canadian History. Now in its eleventh season the show continually ranks in the top 50 of all history podcasts in Canada. David is also the producer and host of his newest podcast The Conflict and Culture Podcast which explores anything and everything to do with military history beyond the battlefield.
